FOREST PHARMACY.

NATURE'S REMEDIES USED BY MEN IN LUMBER WOODS.

For Every Ill or Injury There Is a Cure Obtainable in the Trees and Shrubs That Are at Hand.

There is a pharmacy of the woods, and some of its remedies are of wonderful efficacy.

Few people in the outside world know that there is produced in the pine woods a tonic and febrifuge greatly resembling quinine in taste and efficacy. But the lumbermen know it and owe much to its properties when run down in health after seven months of a diet of pork and beans, bread, tea and frozen pork.

The sovereign remedy in these cases is pine apple. Up among the branches near to where a twig shows that the great tree has just passed its acme of growth, a drab colored fungus of a rude conical shape, generally about half as big as a man's head, clings to the bark. This is the pine apple of the woods.

Some woodmen use it as a powder, chips cut from it being dried at the fire and also used for heat. Others use an infusion prepared by boiling. It is a fine tonic, acts gently as a diuretic and scatters feverishness rapidly. It produces violent headache if used too much and it is said to bring on insanity if used for a long time continuously.

When the pine apple is not available hemlock bark is successfully used. The bark is taken from a young, vigorous tree, shredded and boiled until the liquid becomes of a rich red-brown color. A large spoonful of this is taken at meal times as a tonic and purgative. That this should be its effect is remarkable, considering that hemlock bark contains so much as astringent tannin that it is greatly used in the manufacture of leather.

This is also the great "shanty" remedy for horses.

When changes of weather are frequent and the trapped or lumberman suffers from a cough he seeks a remedy in a balsam tree. Upon the smooth bark are blisters sometimes inches long, and within these is a fragrant resin. This contains benzoic acid and a resinous turpentine and is a world-famed remedy where there is rawness about the breathing apparatus. Balsam is also often used for cuts of sores and has much healing virtue.

Sarsaparilla, which is a sort of half cousin to ginseng, is well and favorably known as a cleansing and restorative agent. The roots are found growing by decayed wood, are easily obtained and have been used as spring medicine and in the ceremonious cleansing by the Indians from times immemorial.

Cedar oil is a valuable liniment and as a general pain killer had immense vogue at one time among patent medicine men. Guides and trappers still believe in it.

Every woodsman is a staunch believer in the virtue of skunk's grease as an embrocation.

Bear's oil is often mixed with a crude kind of turpentine distilled from the old roots of a pine stump, and it is considered to be of great value when rubbed upon the chest in cases of inflammation of the lungs or pneumonia. In extreme cases a spoonful is administered to the sufferer.

A poultice of well boiled basswood suckers is also highly recommended in cases of lung trouble. The bark of slippery elm is used in pulmonary troubles as a substitute for Irish moss, and is really, when properly prepared, a good, nutritious and palatable food.

A decoction of cherry bark and spruce bark, boiled and strained, is an old Indian remedy for coughs, which has been largely sold under various names for years by vendors of patent medicines. The white trapper now-a-days dissolves spruce gum in alcohol, adds a certain proportion of the spirits to the bark mixture and sweetens the whole with maple sugar. Perhaps the most experienced chemists could not prepare a better cough syrup than this makes.

The great specific in cases of incipient cholera is a strong tea made from blackberry bush roots, fortified with spirits and made very sweet.

For scratches, chapped hands and other sores, woodland science furnishes the most grateful ointment to be found anywhere. It is delightfully fragrant, and has a cooling and soothing action. It is made from the gum buds of the whitewood or poplar, which is often called from its value as a provider of unguent the Balm of Gilead tree. The buds are boiled down with deer's fat in proper proportion, and a little honey is added as the mass cools. That nothing finer in its way has ever been discovered is the common verdict of all who have ever made use of it.

Literary Fame on Sale.

Fame is now a merchantable commodity. An English publisher has opened a shop in Rue de Richelieu, Paris, where he proposes to furnish unknown authors with reputations. The kind varies with the price, for instance: Vague notoriety, one month's duration at maximum, $4000; annual reputation, $1,000; celebrity, $2,400; literary glory guaranteed for 12 years, $10,000. Portraits at the salon, sandwich board men, sky signs and artificial scandals enter into the "scheme."

MAMMOTH SEA ELEPHANT.

Berlin Zoological Garden Mounts the Largest Specimen Ever Known.

A new and interesting attraction at the Berlin Zoological garden is a mounted specimen of a monster sea elephant. It can claim the distinction of being the largest sea elephant that has ever been killed.

It was found some 18 months ago by whalers off the coast of the Falkland Islands. They promptly surrounded the monster and subsequently slaughtered it—no easy task—and the hide, with the raw skeleton, was purchased at a high price by J. F. G. Urban.

Some idea of the size of the monster may be gauged from the fact that from the tip of its trunk it has a total measurement of nearly 21 feet. Such an animal, when alive, would weigh 10,000 pounds, or nearly four and one-half tons. The circumference of the body at its widest part is some 18 feet. The skull alone measures two feet three inches long and one foot two inches high.

The sea elephant, or seal elephant, is in many ways an interesting creature. So far as size goes, he can give points to the walrus, but he is certainly not so ferocious looking. Except for the curious nose (whence his Greek name), he is just a big black seal, fairly agile in the sea and clumsy ashore, like all his kind. He is about the bulk of a hippopotamus, although more hirsute and with a less extensive opening of the jaw. He holds among seals the unique position of being common to both hemispheres, although from the arctic with which he has been hunted, very few specimens now exist north of the equator.

Just now, however, the sea elephant is enjoying a respite and is consequently increasing in numbers rapidly. He is particularly numerous in the southern seas. His food consists chiefly, if not entirely, of cuttlefish. Formerly the animal was hunted by whalers upon all the islands of the Antarctic ocean, notably Kerguelen's Land and the South Shetland, where they abounded in immense herds. The creatures were slaughtered for their hides and blubber.

The tusks of the male reach a length of four or five feet, the external part being smooth and conical, while the part imbedded in the flesh is furrowed and slightly curved. The tusks of the males are solid at the lower end only a slight cavity appears—while in the female they are shorter, and, moreover, almost hollow up to the point. Sailors and seal hunters are fond of using the hollow teeth of the females for pipe bowls, quills from the wings of pelicans supplying suitable stems for the pipes.

EMPTY-HEADED AND PLAIN.

What King Alfonso Says of Princesses Whom He Will Not Marry.

To the despair of his ministers and his mother, young King Alfonso of Spain continues his resistance to all their plans to make him marry any of the several princesses who have been suggested to him, says a recent report.

"I know that I must marry some day," he is said to have answered his mother not long ago, "but as long as time comes, I shall submit quietly, but it seems to me that when I, for the sake of providing an heir to the throne, consent to marry one of these empty-headed, plain-looking and anything but charming princesses, on your list, I ought to be allowed a few years' freedom before entering into a loveless marriage."

Card of Chinese Merchant.

A Chinese, recently returned to his native country after a residence in the United States, has brought back some of our business methods, as his card will show. He has a dairy farm at Woosung, a village at the mouth of the Shanghai river, and two English cows furnish the milk which the card advertises. "I have a dairy farm at Woosung, a village at the mouth of the Shanghai river, and two English cows furnish the milk which the card advertises. We open at Moo Sung—for sale the foreign milk, the taste is sweet, the milk is pure, and the price is just. We haven't put out a card. If I examine out, won't pay a single cash."

Mexican Banking Development.

The development of banking in Mexico is shown by the fact that during the six months ended June 30 the combined capital of the chartered banks of the republic increased from $105,000,000 to $127,356,844. Following are some increases noted: Banco Central Mexicano, $11,000,000; Banco de Londres y Mexico, $6,500,000; Banco de Tabasco, $100,000; Banco de Tamasulipas, $100,000; Banco Comercial Refaccionario de Chihuahua, $50,000; Banco Nacional de Mexico, $27,027; total, $17,356,844.

No Use for Genius.

Of all desperately dangerous persons the brilliant surgeon is the most lamentable, declares Sir Frederick Treves. Genius is some sort of uncalculated nervous disease, and the usual men of genius are quite impossible persons and entirely out of place in the medical profession, where even cleverness is not to be encouraged.

ESCAPED GUERRILLA BAND.

Death of the Rev. H. D. Fisher, Famous in Early Kansas History, at Baldwin, Kan.

Kansas City, Mo.—Rev. H. D. Fisher, who died at Baldwin, Kan., was one of the most famous characters produced by the trying days of the border warfare in Kansas and the subsequent four years of civil war. Because of his activity as a free-state man and his association with United States Senator "Jim" Lane Mr. Fisher was marked by the Quantrell band, and his escape from capture and death in the Lawrence massacre is one of the most thrilling and remarkable incidents of that affair.

Fisher was one of the few men who ever refused a United States senatorship. When Senator Lane committed suicide Gov. Crawford announced his intention of appointing Dr. Fisher to fill the vacancy. Later Dr. Fisher said in relating his reasons for refusing the offer: "My wife and I laid the matter before God in prayer. The decision was against accepting the appointment."

Every Two Minutes

Physicians tell us that all the blood in a healthy human body passes through the heart once in every two minutes. If this action becomes irregular the whole body suffers. Poor health follows poor blood; Scott's Emulsion makes the blood pure. One reason why is such a great aid is because it passes so quickly into the blood. It is partly digested before it enters the stomach; a double advantage in this. Less work for the stomach; quicker and more direct benefits. To get the greatest amount of good with the least possible effort is the desire of everyone in poor health. Scott's Emulsion does just that. A change for the better takes place even before you expect it.
